Author picture:

In 1955, with the drive for statehood stalled, a group of men and women from all over Alaska, delegates with strong convictions, given to strong, often colorful expression, created a state constitution that is now considered a model. Proving that Alaska was politically mature, it pushed a reluctant U.S. Congress to grant statehood to Alaska.

Mary Ames set off for a life of adventure at 17. She hitchhiked around the Lower 48, and when that got old, she hopped freight trains. She avoided the paved path to college by picking vegetables in the fields of California, Waitressing, tending bar, trapping, hunting, fishing, cleaning houses, planting trees, working as a physical therapy aid and teaching children to swim. When her body started to give out, she returned to college and emerged with a degree in journalism. She lives in Alaska's Matanuska-Susitna Valley. She has survived life in Alaska, in the Bush, in Fairbanks and Southcentral since May, 1985.

Proving that Alaska was politically mature, it pushed a reluctant U.S. Congress to grant statehood to Alaska.

As a young reporter for United Press in Washington, D.C. during the final campaign for Alaska statehood, Gerald E. Bowkett interviewed Alaska-Tennessee Plan Senator Ernest Gruening. A former Alaskan, Bowkett returned to the territory in 1957 to work for the Anchorage Times. Later, he served as press secretary to Governor William Egan, Juneau bureau chief for the Anchorage Daily News, editor of the Juneau Empire, and director of information services at the University of Alaska.

Alaska's Deadly Dozen is a collection of twelve compelling true crime stories, notorious murder cases in the modern history of our northernmost state. It covers the gamut from a serial rapist who decides he has been making a mistake by letting his victims live and develops a hunter's scheme to kill them, to a man who kills for a hobby and travels the nation in search of victims.

A native of Massachusetts, Tom Brennan is a newspaper columnist and witty fellow who cut his teeth in journalism on the police beat. He moved to Alaska in 1967. He is a communications consultant, newspaper columnist, former oilman, and self-described "recovering fly-fisherman." He and his wife, Marnie, live in Anchorage.

In a rich, beautifully written memoir, James W. Brooks recalls astonishing adventures of his youth when he lived off the land in the final days of the Territory of Alaska and later became a wildlife biologist and helped write and enforce fish and game laws for the new State of Alaska.

James W. Brooks left his boyhood home in Michigan and made his way to Alaska as a seventeen-year-old in 1940. Here he found a new world that offered occupations suited to an adventurous young man: fisherman, railroad worker, Caterpillar operator, trapper, musher, wartime flyer, walrus researcher, bush pilot, whale biologist. He led the Territory of Alaska's wildlife management program into the era of statehood and later served as commissioner of the state Department of Fish and Game. Brooks published numerous scientific and popular articles on Alaska's living resources. He received an honorary Doctor of Science degree from his alma mater, the University of Alaska, in 1989.

Identical twins Miki and Julie Collins trap, hunt, fish, and garden in Alaska's wilderness just north of Denali National Park in Alaska's vast interior. Their closest companions are loyal sled dogs and Icelandic horses, which eat fish and can withstand northern extremes.

Julie and Miki Collins grew up in the vast, roadless wilderness north of Denali National Park in Alaska, spending their childhood in a community of roughly thirty people scattered around the shores of a large lake. After seven years of correspondence home schooling, the twin sisters attended high school and college in Fairbanks, studying biology and journalism at the University of Alaska. Then they returned to their family's homestead, where they continue to live a traditional Bush lifestyle, trapping for fur, hunting for meat, fishing, and growing their own produce. Julie ran the 1,000-mile Yukon Quest, Miki once entered the Iditarod, and the sisters bought their first Icelandic horse, Lilja, in 1986.

This is a story about Kay Fanning's love affair with Alaska and newspapers. An adventurous woman who took risks and reinvented her life. Kay Fannings memoir was a joy to read. --Ellen Goodman, Boston Globe.

Kay Fanning loved journalism. She served as editor and publisher of the Anchorage Daily News, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, and first woman president of the American Society of Newspaper Editors. Katherine Field Stephen, herself a reporter, was determined to finish her mother's book. And she did, by inviting eighteen of Kay's friends and colleagues to contribute personal stories about Kay Fanning.

The Natives of Alaska, the Athabaskan Indians, are facing a momentous crisis. Their traditional way of life is being threatened with extinction by the culture of the white man. What changes have been wrought in the lifestyle of the Indians? How are they meeting the challenge to their heritage? In Villagers, Claire Fejes--a resident of Alaska for more than thirty-five years--takes us on an extended voyage up the Tanana and Yukon rivers, to visit Indian villages along the way, New Minto, Galena, Koyukuk, Fort Yukon, Nenana, Kaltag and Rampart.

In the early 1900s, wilderness travel was slow going from Vadez to Fairbanks on the Richardson Trail, where dozens of log roadhouses were welcome havens that dog-tired trappers, miners, adventurers, government people, and a few misfits. Sharing stories was entertainment at day's end. Each story-teller tried to top the one before.

Samme Gallaher was the 3rd and youngest daughter of Blanche Gillham Gallaher and Samuel LeRoy Gallaher (usually known as Roy), who settled in Fresno, CA when Samme was still a baby. A hugely defining event in her life occurred at age 15, when her oldest sister, Aileen, asked their parents to let Samme come live in Alaska with her and her husband, Slim Williams, in a cabin in the Copper River Valley. There she learned to drive a dog team, shoot a rifle and hunt caribou, and many other skills required to live in the wilderness year round. Her book, Sisters: Coming of Age and Living Dangerously in the Copper River Valley, tells the story of her adventures in Alaska in 1927-28 and again when she returned in 1929-30.

In this memoir, a sequel to his immensely popular autobiography, former Alaska governor Jay Hammond spins more delightful yarns about the fascinating people and humorous situations he has encountered from one end of Alaska to the other.

Jay Sterner Hammond (July 21, 1922 – August 2, 2005) was an American politician of the Republican Party, who served as the fourth governor of Alaska from 1974 to 1982. Hammond was born in Troy, New York and served as a Marine Corps fighter pilot in World War II with the Black Sheep Squadron. In 1946, he moved to Alaska where he worked as a bush pilot. Hammond served as a state representative from 1959 to 1965 and as a state senator from 1967 to 1973. From 1972 until 1974 he was the mayor of the Bristol Bay Borough. Then, in 1974, he was elected governor of Alaska. He oversaw the creation of the Alaska Permanent Fund in 1976, which, since the early 1980s, has paid annual dividends to Alaska residents. He advocated for fiscal responsibility. When his tenure as governor was over, he continued to be active in public life. He advocated for environmentally and fiscally responsible government and individual civic responsibility. From 1985 to 1992 he hosted a television series called Jay Hammond's Alaska. He wrote three autobiographies.

In his autobiography, Jay Hammond reveals the real Alaska beyond the media myths and tourist literature. I don't know when I have laughed so hard or so much. --The News Tribune, Tacoma, WA.

In 1946 Hammond, a Methodist minister's son from New York State and a Marine pilot during WW II, realized his dream of moving to Alaska. Once there he had many jobs, including trapping, fishing, guiding, flying and working for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. He also served six years in the House beginning in 1959, the advent of statehood, then six more in the Senate. Hammond was elected governor in 1974 in an upset victory over the favored candidate who was backed by the press and the unions; in 1978 he was reelected, campaigning for a balance between industrial growth and preservation of the environment.

Dreaming Bears is the true story of the rare friendship that develops between a young medical student with deep roots in the South and an elderly Indian couple in the wilds of northeast Alaska.

Mike Holloway was born in Greenwood, South Carolina. Summer trips to rural Alaska in 1961 and 1962 – begun as an adventure – led to his friendship with Johnny and Sarah Frank, and redirected his life. As an undergraduate, Mike attended The Citadel, where he was a member of the Junior Sword Drill. After completing medical studies in South Carolina and interning in Virginia, he became a doctor with the Peace Corps and then for the Bristol Bay Native hospital in Alaska. He returned to the South to complete a residency in orthopedic surgery. In 1973 he joined the orthopedic staff of the Alaska Native Medical Center (ANMC) in Anchorage. In 1977 Mike took a year and a half break from orthopedics and worked as a subsistence advocate and Washington D.C.-village liaison for the Alaska Rural Community Action Program. He then returned to work at ANMC, where he served some years as Chief of Orthopedics and received a number of awards for his service. In 2001, Mike was diagnosed with Parkinson's disease, ending his work at ANMC. Feeling that he still had much to offer, he taught orthopedics through Health Volunteers Overseas.

2020 was a year of change. Caught between occupations and a global pandemic, 24-year-old Joe Jackson decided to write an essay for every fly-fishing trip he took. And just like the fishing itself, these essays drift from the metaphysical to the wholly matter-of-fact.

Joseph Jackson is a social studies teacher by day and a fly fisherman the rest of the time. If he's not on the water, he's either pining for it or writing about it. He's been published widely in the fly-fishing magazine world, where he and his wife, Emmie, also feature much of their photography. He lives in Anchorage but part of his heart will always belong to the Wyoming he grew up in. He was last spotted at a gas station somewhere in the Last Frontier with a fly rod sticking out the back window. It's Only Fishing is his first book.

At Howard Rock's birth, a shaman predicted that he would become a great man. Born in 1911 in a sod igloo in Point Hope, an ancient Eskimo village, Howard became an accomplished artist and crusading newspaper editor who helped to defend his people from a controversial Atomic Energy Commission proposal to excavate a harbor near his native village with an atomic blast. Art and Eskimo Power chronicles the life of this influential and artist, editor, and founder of the Tundra Times—under whose leadership the newspaper helped to organize Alaska's native people to press their aboriginal land claims before Congress, which ultimately led to their being awarded over $1 billion and 40 million acres.

Lael began her journalism career as a reporter for the Malden, Massachusetts, Press, then moved to Alaska in 1959. She worked for Alaska Methodist University then moved into advertising. In the mid '60s, Lael worked for a time in canneries, then was hired as a photojournalist at the Juneau Empire, covered crime, politics and the legislature for the Fairbanks Daily New Miner and Jessen's Weekly and freelanced for the Tundra Times and other publications around the state.

Jack Roderick's story of oil and politics in Alaska reads like a novel. He tells of the risky, expensive, and mostly frustrating search for oil across the Northland.

Jack Roderick grew up in Seattle. He studied and played football at the University of Washington and at Yale University and served in the Navy Air Corps in World War II. In 1954, he traveled to Alaska where he drove a truck and moved furniture to earn money for law school. During four decades in Alaska, he started an oil reporting service, a title insurance company, and an oil exploration firm, practiced law, worked with Alyeska Pipeline Service Company to help enact the Native Claims Settlement Act, served as mayor of the Anchorage Borough, and was a resources and energy administrator for the state. As a fellow of the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University, he researched Alaska's oil history and he taught the subject in the 1980's at Alaska Pacific University.

The enchanting story of how a mouse came to live in a Tlingit (Indian) clan house in Haines, Alaska, and became part of the culture. When the mouse finds the Tlingit clan house, he thinks he's sneaky enough to avoid being caught, but what he doesn't know is that the tribe leader is watching his every move.

Jan Steinbright is a writer, oral historian, teacher and an artist. She has been involved with the administration and documentation of Alaska Native Cultural programs for 25 years and is the author/editor of Qayaqs and Canoes: Native Ways of Knowing and My Own Trail, the life history of Howard Luke, an Athabascan tradition bearer. For 18 years, she edited the Journal of Alaska Native Arts and served as program coordinator for the Institute of Alaska Native Arts in Fairbanks. She currently lives in Sitka where she spends as much time as possible on the water and walking beaches, when not teaching at Sheldon Jackson College.

She has been involved with the administration and documentation of Alaska Native Cultural programs for 25 years and is the author/editor of Qayaqs and Canoes: Native Ways of Knowing, and My Own Trail, the life history of Howard Luke, an Athabascan tradition bearer. For 18 years, she edited the Journal of Alaska Native Arts and served as program coordinator for the Institute of Alaska Native Arts in Fairbanks. Robert Davis Hoffman is a Tlingit artist from the village of Kake, a small Tlingit village on Kupreanof Island in Southeast Alaska. His major achievements are a book of poetry, Soulcatcher; set design for Perseverance Theatre's production of the "Tlingit Macbeth"; and the creation of the forty-eight-foot-long backdrop for Sealaska Corporation's biennial celebration of the Tlingit, Haida and Tsimshian tribal cultures in Juneau. He lives in Sitka in a stucco house, amid an ambrosial garden tended by his wife Kris. He teaches at Sheldon Jackson College, dreaming of studio space and impossible woodcarvings.

Jon Van Zyle shares his adventures in Alaska, the inspiration of his earliest painting to his recent work.

Art is Jon's life and Alaska, all Alaska, has been his inspiration. Artist Jon Van Zyle has seen more of Alaska in a much more unique way than most can ever hope to experience. Jon has twice completed the 1049 miles of the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race between Anchorage and Nome. From these adventures he has created the yearly Iditarod poster series commemorating the race and his involvement. In 1979 he was made the official Iditarod artist, a title he still holds today. In 2004 he was inducted into the Iditarod Hall of Fame. His acrylic paintings go beyond the race though, and encompass so much of the Alaska beauty.

Bird Birl an independent young Indian woman, defies her family's epectations by refusing to become a traditional wife and mother. Instead she choose to brave life on her own as a hunter, riskng starvation, isolation and attacks by her people's enemies, the Eskimos. Along the way she meets Daagoo, a restless young dreamer who leaves behind his homeland to journey south in search of the legendary Land of the Sun

Velma Wallis was born in Fort Yukon, a remote village of about 650 people in Interior Alaska, near where the Porcupine River flows into the Yukon. Wallis was raised in a tradtional Athabaskan family, one of thirteen children. When she was thirteen, her father died and she left school to help her mother raise her younger brothers and sisters. Later, she passed her high school equivalency exam and moved to a trapping cabin twelve miles from the village, where she learned to live off the land by hunting, fishing, and trapping. Wallis based her first two books, Two Old Women and Bird Girl and the Man Who Followed the Sun, on the Athabaskan stories her mother told her when she was growing up.

They are watching us, these ghosts of the North. They cook breakfast, play cards, mine gold, turn on radios, and play the piano. Haunted Alaska is a collection of ghost stories that will raise the hair on the back of your neck.

Ron Wendt was raised on his family's homestead near Fairbanks and his father's mining claims in the Circle gold fields of eastern Alaska. He developed an early interest in Alaska history by exploring the ghost towns and mining camps and talking with old-timers from the gold rush era. He had worked as a gold miner, newspaper, reporter, photographer, college instructor, construction worker, and maintenance man. Wendt's articles and photos appeared in numerous publications. He owned Goldstream Publications of Wasilla, Alaska. Wendt passed away in 2008.
